

Newsflash 2 - Copyright

Last Updated Monday, 18 August 2008

COPYRIGHT

All content and images on this site is copyrighted to Supashots Photography. You are not permitted to copy/download or use any image on this site OR make copies of prints purchased, for any reason whatsoever without prior written permission from Supashots. Please click on "Read more" to read the remainder.

What is the copyright?

Copyright is an International covenant, wherein, while a purchaser may own the individual print, one does not, unless a specific license has been purchased, own the image upon the print. A bit like a book really, when you purchase a book, you may own the book but the words within the book are owned by the copyright holder. All you own is the individual copy of the book. Same with copyrighted photos - you own a copy of the photograph, but the image remains under control of the photographer and must not be copied. Putting a copy on your computer desktop for instance is not a problem, but if you wish to have additional prints, beyond your original order, or to use the image for advertising or on websites, then please contact us at supashots. Breach of Copyright is a crime and there are numerous cases of succesful prosecutions being taken.

If you still are unclear or have questions then read the material on this site; <http://www.whatiscopyright.org/>.